Dear Gloria,

The other day in the woods I met a snapping turtle stepping along carefully on incongruous long, elephant-baggy legs, dragging its spring dinosaur tail. It peered at me with its big fist of a head, on gliding neck, and suddenly things seemed timeless, prehistoric. Then it proceeded slowly into the blackberry vines & honeysuckle along the path, and as it moved on, invisible, the brush twitched.

Later, as I ran back along the same path, right where I had met the turtle, a taut black snake glinted in the sun. Its black tongue flickered. I waited. Eventually it flowed on, somehow moving & motionless all at once.

Love, Allan
